For many young baseball players, playing Major League Baseball is a life's dream. Thanks to the MLB Diamond Skills competition, young Mark McGwire's and Ken Griffey, Jr.'s aboard MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay competed Sunday to earn the next best thing, the opportunity to play in a major league stadium and even at the site of the 2001 MLB All-Star Game.

The event, officially sponsored by Major League Baseball, and hosted locally by Marine Corps Community Services, is an annual competition designed to give young baseball players the opportunity to showcase their skills in three areas, batting, fielding and base running, said Gunnery Sgt. Lenny D. Maldonado, pay and discharge chief, Headquarters Bn., MCB Hawaii.

The first event the players were judged in was batting. The batting competition was judged on distance and accuracy. A batter approached a batting tee and had three opportunities to hit the ball. The player's best hit was recorded for score.

Following the batting competition, the young sluggers were evaluated on their ability to field the ball and make a throw to home plate. The players had to field a groundball and make a throw into a designated area surrounding home plate. They were timed from the moment the ball touched their glove to the moment the ball passed through the 10-foot target 100 feet away at home plate.

The final portion of the event was the base-running competition. Competitors ran a total of 160 feet, from second base, around third and through home plate.

At the conclusion of the competition, the batting, fielding, base running and all around champions were crowned in each age category.

The all-around champions were: Mike Johnson for the 7 and 8-year-olds, Tylor Kidd for the 9 and 10-year-olds, Tyler Zinck for the 11 and 12-year-olds and Torey Bixler for the 13 and 14-year-olds. Tylor Kidd, 9 and 10-year-old all-around champion dominated his age group, claiming victory in every category.

"Being all-around champion feels good," said Kidd. "I have never been all-around champion before."

The all-around and individual category champions will continue to compete during the Sectional Competition, which takes place today at Ala Moana Military Reservation.

If they show they have the skill and desire to move on, the competitors will move to the Team Competition at the home of MLB's Anaheim Angels in Anaheim, Calif.

Following the Team Championships, should some of K-Bays youth show that they are among the top four players in their age group nationally, they will move on the National Finals, which are scheduled to be held during MLB All-Star Week in Seattle, Wash., site of the 2001 All-Star Game.

Though playing Major League Baseball may be just a dream, 16 young ballplayers from MCB Hawaii, Kaneohe Bay are carrying on to the next level of competition, looking to earn their chance to get close to that dream.

Nate Birkin slows to a walk as he crosses home plate at the end of the 160-foot base run.

The ball just seems to float right into the gloved hand of Kyle Kaiahua during the competition.

MCCS class offers opportunities for self-employment

Debbie Aisoff
MCCS Public Relations

All-aboard! Warning to all passengers: you must embody a true pioneer spirit, a high risk-taking threshold and have a well-developed business plan if you desire to endure this turbulent train. If you're ready, please fasten your seat belt and prepare to "Pass Go and collect $200."
What fantastic business idea do you have? What industry will put you on the cover of Entrepreneur Magazine? No other country in the world compares to the vast opportunities for start-up businesses than in America. With so much opportunity why isn't everyone "going for the gold?" According to Jerry Hirata, Lead Loan Specialist of the U.S. Small Business Administration, Hawaii District Office, lots of people have good ideas, but not all of those ideas produce a profitable venture. How do you determine if you have a worthy business or not?
To help better prepare MCB Hawaii's military personnel, family members, reservists and retirees for employment after the military, the Transition Assistance Management Program (TAMP) part of the Personal Services Department through Marine Corps Community Services, hosts a free quarterly "Starting and Financing Your Own Business" seminar.
"This class will help people not only open a business but stay in business," said Jim Gardner, Director of TAMP. Many aspiring entrepreneurs will benefit from this two-hour business course, as it will provide an outline of SBA services and programs as well as the importance and the ingredients of a sound business and financial plan.
According to Gardner, the "Starting and Financing Your Own Business" course has been offered aboard MCB Hawaii since 1999. Each class is designed to feature the latest in business plans and services. To implement this modern vision, members of the local community are invited as keynote speakers to showcase an array of business material and resources.
One such community member is from the SBA, Jerry Hirata. Presenting a Power Point slide show, Hirata enthusiastically informs students to the many monetary and management pitfalls and safety nets entrepreneurs have available through the "SBA Tool Box."
The "tool box" according to Hirata encompasses five fundamental platforms: Business Information and Counseling Centers (BICC), Service Corps of Retired Executives (SCORE), Small Business Development Centers (SBDC), Hawaii Women Business Center, and the SBA Financial Programs. Much of the information Hirata discusses may be applied to businesses starting anywhere in the country.
"It's really a win-win relationship," noted Hirata. "Since the Clinton administration, SBAs across the nation have really focussed efforts to nurture the local communities—it benefits us all."
For potential local business owners, Milton Knock of the Business Action Center assumes the role of conductor and speaks to students regarding local licensing, information and referral strictly for Hawaii.

an embroidery business called "Tailor Made Embroidery." Smith digitizes photos and then embroiders them onto anything from handbags to pillows to dresses to denim jeans.
"This class is incredibly helpful," noted Smith. "The guest speakers cover basically everything you need to do to get started—and there's a lot to do!"
The most difficult obstacle Smith noted regarding her start-up business was the out-of-pocket expenses.
Part of securing enough working capital for start-up expenses is accomplished through a detailed business plan. According to Knock, the business plan is meant to be an organic piece—a living, breathing document that can easily be studied and updated.
What industry is your business muse fueling your passion? Computer consulting? Interior designing? A neighborhood pub? Before you plunge into the unforgiving business typhoon, be pro-active and develop a solid offense. The "Starting and Financing Your Own Business" class is your first stop to help meet your business goals.
Your Entrepreneur Express need not be a run-away train if you do your homework and make the available resources work for you. The next "Starting and Financing Your Own Business" is offered in July 2001 aboard MCB Hawaii. You have to start somewhere. Let the professionals at TAMP show you how to get there. For more information, call Jim Gardner at 257-7790.
